WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

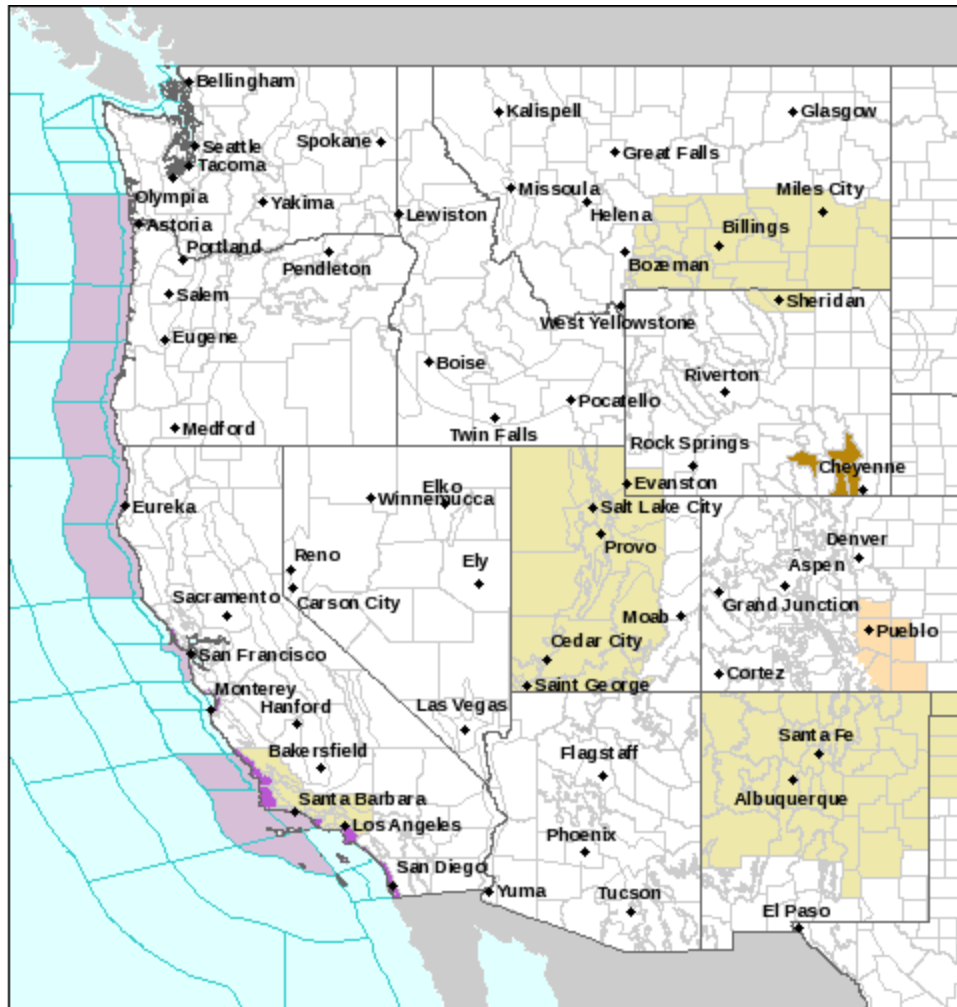

A high pressure ridge remains over the West Coast today. Temperatures will be around 10 degrees above normal throughout the North Ops area. Winds will be light and strong inversions will be common in valleys and canyons. The ridge will move off to the east tonight as a Pacific frontal system approaches the coast. Clouds and Southeast to Southwest winds will increase from West to East on Friday, and rain will move onshore around noon. As the system moves through Northern California late Friday into early Saturday the Northwest Mountains may see up to an inch of rainfall, with lighter amounts as far South as Santa Rosa to Truckee. Snow levels will be above 5000 feet. Another system will move through late Sunday and Monday with similar precipitation, followed by more high pressure Tuesday and Wednesday. A third system is expected to arrive next Thursday.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Well above average temperatures along with very low humidity will continue across the area through Friday as a strong ridge of high pressure sits over California. Maximum temperatures will remain in the 60s to low 70s across the mountains with mid 70s to mid 80s in the valleys. Minimum humidity will be mainly in the single digits and teens away from the San Joaquin Valley and immediate coast. A couple of troughs will move Inland over the Pacific Northwest bringing a little cooler temperatures and a little increase in humidity to Southern California Saturday through Monday. The second trough will drop into the Great Basin which will cause West to Northwest winds of 20 to 30 mph with gusts to 50 mph to surface across the mountain ridges and desert passes Sunday night through Monday morning. Another strong ridge of high pressure will build into California from the Pacific Ocean bringing well above normal temperatures along with minimum humidity in the single digits and teens once again next Tuesday and Wednesday.
